

Byron L. Conway Jr. is the Director of Diversity, Equity, Inclusion, & Belonging for the Office of Respondent Parents' Counsel in Denver, CO. Byron is a proud alumnus of the University of Michigan, where he received his bachelor's degree in political science and African American studies, with a research focus on African American political thought and political statistics. After graduating from UMich, Byron attended Boston University School of Law and graduated with honors in 2013. After graduating from law school, Byron joined the Public Defender Service for the District of Columbia (PDS) as a staff attorney in the trial division. May 2019, Byron transitioned from his role in DC to Atlanta, Georgia, where he was an assistant federal defender with the Federal Defender Program, Inc. In his role with the federal defenders' office in Atlanta, Byron defended indigent individuals charged with felony matters in the United States District Courts for the Northern District of Georgia and handled appeals before the United States 11th Circuit Court of Appeals. Byron also led workshops and training in GA and around the United States on litigating race within the context of the Fourth Amendment.

Byron is a nationally sought-after trial skills trainer for various offices, agencies, and firms throughout the United States. Byron currently serves as a board member and faculty for the National Criminal Defense College and an executive board member for the Black Public Defender Association. Byron's current practice specializes in litigating, consulting, and training lawyers to effectively advocate at the intersection of race and the law, with a particular focus on how lawyers can effectively incorporate issues of race into their courtroom advocacy.